Project deliverable Template Project deliverable is a service or result that is 128; It is addressed to interested parties and often has a deadline by which it must be completed. A delivery is an important part of the project and can be defined as something unique, tangible or intangible in 194; 160product due to a project. A delivery could be a report, document or software product, or any other essential block of a project. A delivery can be classified as internal or external. Internal products are usually necessary for © the project can run smoothly, but may not be part of the service or product delivered to end-users. Examples of internal outcomes include project management, training, 1994; 160th test. Outside products are usually those supplied to the customer or interested parties. An IT system, a recently built house or building, a website, etc., are examples of external products. Deliveries can be large or small. There is no defined size for a product. A savior can be as big as a house or as small as a relationship generated within a team. The results of the high-level project should be identified at the beginning of the project. That is when it is proposed. As the project progresses, these may be further specified and refined. It is good practice for all project tasks to have concrete results. For example: in a software development project, a research paper, a project project project, project, documents, creating a user manual, etc., are some of the results. Some main examples of a project deliverable could be the following: An expected deliverable in project management is a software product. When developing a software program for a customer, these software products are customized and usually delivered in phases. For example, In the case of a website or a banking application, different pages or modules are developed and each module is a deliverable. Replacement of old equipment in organizations is generally undertaken as a project. For example, installing printers, desktops, laptops, phones or any other resource provided to customers is considered a deliverable. Milestones are another example of a deliverable. A milestone has a fixed expiration date and signifies the completion of an important deliverable during the course of the project. For, for example, While a home is a final product, designing the floor plan, building/completing every room, etc., are milestones that result in the final production "the home". A training program is another example of a deliverable. Although the training program is the final product and one of the main outcomes, designing the training program, finalizing the content, organizing the logistics are some of the outcomes that must be produced to reach and complete the final deliverable. To illustrate the results of the project, let's take an example of a project for the creation of a website of a retail bank. Creating a website involves a number of achievements and milestones. Some of the milestones of this project are the collection of requirements, the design of the website, the finalization of the content, the agreement and the organization of the infrastructure. Completed tasks for these outputs are the results Project, some of which are listed below: Wireframes Design Login Module Design Account Creating Summary Page Configuration of Fund Transfer Fund Design Rewards Module Design.
